

Greetings ,

With April coming to a close, it's not too late to take action. Read about three Stop It Now! events and use these as a springboard for action.

Community Dialogues

This April, communities in Virginia and Minnesota had the opportunity to participate in Community Dialogues with people personally affected by child sexual abuse--as adults who were sexually abused as children, as adults who sexually abused children, and as family members who know and love both the offender and the victim.

Panelists shared their stories and then engaged in conversation with the audience in the belief that talking about sexual abuse can prevent children from being harmed.

After hearing what I've heard, "there is hope".

Awareness to Action Webinar

Nearly 100 people joined us for Awareness to Action: Preventing Child Sexual Abuse. This introductory webinar focused on Stop It Now! resources, research, and practical tips on what each of us can do to prevent child sexual abuse before children are harmed.

When asked how they would use the information,

- 77% said they would download and share a tip sheet;
- 70% would talk with a colleague; and
- 45% would talk with a friend.

"The workshop truly concentrated on prevention instead of intervention. The examples, with action steps people can take to deal with situations, were really useful. I loved the interactive nature of the workshop."

International Collaborations

From April 28th to May 3rd, Stop It Now! staff will be in Trinidad for Preventing Child Sexual Abuse: Cross-Cultural Explorations, Explanations, and Interventions. This training is offered in collaboration with The Centre for Applied Childhood Studies and the Institute for Gender and Development Studies.

Stop It Now! staff will also meet with grantees of our Community Collaborations for Emerging Countries, including representatives from Child Aid in Kenya and Corpolutin of Columbia.
